* Muhammad bin Sám, better known as Muhammad Ghaurí, was the younger brother of Ghiyás-ud-dín. The elder brother never came to India; but the younger brother conquered India and ruled in the name of the elder. The coins of the elder brother are here given. Two coins also are given on which the names of the two brothers appear. Ten coins also are given of Mahmúd son of Ghiyás and one of Muhammad. Some of these ten coins were in all probability struck in the Panjáb.

* Jalál-ud-dín was driven from Ghaznih by Changez Khán, and across the Indus. He must, herefore, have been for sometime in North West India. Saif-ud-dín Ḥasan Qurlugh was one of s leading generals. The coins of this general and of his master have the same kind of crescent mpressed, on the rump of the bull. The Qurlugh coins, therefore, naturally follow the coins of lál-ud-dín of Khwárizm, as do those of Changez Khán.

Of these 18 kings there are only eight coins in the Indian Museum collection. Very many more are known. They are very interesting coins as many kings struck several types.

Aḥsan Sháh, surnamed Gángú Bahmaní from his first master in Dehlí, was a Kaithal Sayyid who rose from a low position to that of a General of Muḥammad Tughlaq, who entrusted him with the charge of a large district. He rebelled and became independent in 748 H. at Kulburga or Aḥsanábád, commonly called Ḥasanábád.

* It will be noticed how the year of accession disagrees frequently with the Hijrí year, on the issues of the Muḥammadábád-Banáras mint. Some of the Hijrí years are those of Akbar II, though the coins were struck in the name of Sháh 'Álam II. All consistency was disregarded. It is next to impossible to classify coins of this kind chronologically. In the above attempt at classification the year of accession has been followed. When two years occur thus, سنه $\frac{۱۷}{۴۶}$, the lower one has been accepted as the true year, or the one intended.

* The occurrence of two dates on this rupee, 11726, and others, of the Amritsar Mint is peculiar. Ranjít Singh commenced this method of keeping one year on the mint side of the rupee for many years, while the real year was placed on the other as is seen by a glance at the rupee 11726. This style obtained till 1905 Samvat, when the power of the Sikhs was annihilated in the battle of Gujarát.

When the Sikhs assumed independence in 1823, Saṁvat, they struck rupees in Lahore, on which was a Persian couplet in which the names of these two Gurus occur.

Both sides of this coin are covered with Ahom-characters. They are a kind of debased Nágarí. On one side is a four-legged animal like the one on the Asám coins. This coin, therefore, is probably a coin of Asám. It is similar to the one given in Marsden, Pl. LIII, No. MCCXXI.

* The eight coins, numbered 7693 down to 9051, have no Greek legends on them. The obverse of the coins has an image very much similar to the coins of Bazo Deo which have Greek legends. These coins come from Sijistan, one of the homes of the Scythians. They are given here from want of reliable data which would enable us to put them with certainty in their own proper place. They are probably later than the time of Bazo Deo. In some Sassanian influence is discernible. In others the letters are ranged Gupta fashion.

†13459 S. 57·5 0 75	do.	do.

* These two coins look like copies. If real, they are denarii of Marcus Porcius Læca who in the year of Rome 454 carried the law which gave to Roman citizens exemption, on appeal, from the ignominious punishment of scourging. "The quadriga which so frequently occurs on coins of Roman families does not relate to the honours of the triumph" (Stevenson). See Journal, Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. LIX, Plate VI, fig. 1, and E. Babelow's Monnaies de la République Romaine, 1886, To. II, p. 369.

† Both these coins are poor. The full inscription on the reverse is: "C. L. CÆSARES AUGUSTI F. COS. DESIG. PRINC. JUVENT.," which is the abbreviated form of "Caius et Lucius Cæsares Augusti Filii Consules Designati Principes Juventutis" (Stevenson). Caius and Lucius were sons of the great admiral and general, Agrippa, and were adopted by Augustus B. C. 17. As Lucius was designated consul in B. C. 3 these coins could not have been struck before that date. Augustus received the title of Pater Patriæ in B. C. 2. Caius was actual consul in A. D. 1. So these coins were struck probably in the year of Christ's birth.
